Dam flow tops 25k! Release drops river level, beaching the launches

UVRF's launches at the Kendal Park dock were left high and dry last week when Wilder Dam's operators opened the floodgates in order to manage historic flood conditions upriver. Club programs were cancelled on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday as the river raged by, carrying lots of debris downstream. The Safety Committee barred members from taking out club sculling equipment until river conditions returned to safe levels on Sunday. Paul Gross came to the Upper Valley as a Dartmouth freshman in 1969 and he's been rowing the Connecticut River since 1977, but the view from the Ledyard bridge of acres of river bottom land on either side of the Connecticut channel astonished him. "I've never seen the river like that," he said.

It's okay to row club boats again

Now that the Connecticut River flow is back to normal, restrictions barring the use of club boats have been lifted, and Josh & Graham are back on the job as dock monitors. Please log in and out, and rinse the boats after your return.

The Upper Valley Rowing & Friends team members above are just a few of the Juniors, Masters, CReWbies, and friends who raised $339,962 for the Dartmouth Cancer Center. As of July 16, the 42nd Prouty had raised a whopping $7,724,612.58!

Because of the flood, the Prouty rowing event was cancelled, so many members opted to walk, bike, or volunteer. Paul Gross (at left) biked 277 miles in three days as his Prouty effort, raising $5,700!

That's CReWbie Kate Devine on the erg with coach Carin Reynolds cheering her on at the CReW tent at the Prouty.

Post-flood flotsam on July 18 was remarkable. That's Margie Elsberg, Maria Laskaris, Liz Marshall, & Debbie Hannam.
